The Kenner family name comes from the lands of Kinnear, which lie near Wormit in the county of Fife. ^[1] The name literally means "chieftain." ^[2]

ANCIENT HISTORY

The Pictish race, one of the founding races of the British Isles, arrived in Scotland from Brittany about the 5th century B.C. The bearers of the surname Kenner are believed to be descended from this race. Migrating from northwest France they sailed northward to Ireland where they were refused permission to land, but they were allowed by the Kings of Ireland to locate in the eastern part of Scotland with the proviso that all their Kings marry an Irish Princess. According to the Venerable Bede, England's oldest historian, this established their matriarchal hierarchy, rare in the annals of British history.

Nechtan was a Pictish King, in about 724 A.D.; according to Roman history, many Pictish kings before him had fought gallantly at Hadrian's Wall against the Roman invasion many centuries before. Their rivals to the west, the Dalriadans or the highlanders of the Western Isles, were their constant foes in the battle for supremacy for power over all Scotland, known then as Alba, or Caledonia.

Nechtan was finally expelled from Pictland by Alpin, half Dalriadan, half Pict, the result of a political marriage. Alpin's son, Kenneth MacAlpine, son of Alpin, became the first recorded King of Scotland as we know it today. The Picts, compressed by the northern invasion of the Orcadian Vikings from the north who penetrated as far south as Caithness, were left with a territory on the eastern coast of Scotland from Aberdeen, south to Edinburgh.

Among the many sources that researchers examined were such documents as the Inquisitio, 1120 A.D., the Black Book of the Exchequer, the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland, The Ragman Rolls, the Chronicles of the Picts and Scots; and various cartularies of parishes in Scotland. From these archives came early records of the name Kenner in Fife, from the lands of Kinnear near Wormit. The family descend from "Symon, son of Michael,[who] gave a carucate of land of Cathelai to the church of St. Andrews. His grant was confirmed by King Malcolm IV, and King William confirmed the grant of Chathelach, with common pasture for twenty-four beasts, and eighty sheep, which Symon, son of Michael gave, and his son Alan confirmed. The descendants of Symon took the name of Kinnear, and were the vassals of the Priory of St. Andrews in the lands of Kathlac, etc., which they held till the beginning of the eighteenth century. Reginald de Kener witnessed gift of one mark of silver annually by Alexander, earl of Buchan to the Abbey of Arbroath, c. 1250." [3]

SPELLING VARIATIONS

The spelling of the surname Kenner was found in many different forms. Kenner was found in many references, the surname was also spelled Kinnear, Kynnier, Kynnair, Kenneir, Kinner, Kinnier, MacEnir and MacEnnire, and some of these versions are still used today. These changes in spelling frequently occurred, even between father and son. For instance, one clanswoman was recorded being born as Moffit, married as Moffat, and the spelling Moffett appeared on her headstone. Preferences for spelling variations usually either stemmed from a division of the family, had religious reasons, or sometimes patriotic reasons. Scribes and church people frequently selected their own version of what they thought the spelling should be.

The family name Kenner emerged as a Scottish Clan or family in this territory. More specifically they developed in their original territories of Fifeshire where they were settled on the lands of Kinnear. Michael Kinnear was first on record in 1170. In 1216 Simon Kinnear held the lands of Kinnear as confirmed by King Alexander. Sir John Kinnear rendered homage to King Edward I of England on his brief conquest of Scotland in 1296.

"John Kynnier was retoured heir of David Kynnier de eodem, his father, 1543 (Retours, Fife, 2), and Joanne Kingzow in Brechin, 1600, appears again in 1602 as John Keingzer (REB., II, 231,232). John Kenyr, charter witness in Inverness, 1536 (Laing, 403). Henry Kinneir of Kinneir was appointed commendator of Balmerino Abbey, 1574, and John Kinneir of that Ilk was bailie of the abbey." ^[3]

John Kinnear was Chief of the Clan in the year 1543, succeeding his father David before him. Another John Kinnear succeeded in 1574 as Chief of the Clan.

EARLY NOTABLES

Notable amongst the Clan at this time was Petrus Kyrior who was elected common councillor of Aberdeen, 1477; John de Kynor who was admitted burgess of Aberdeen, 1439; and Adam Kynnor in 1457. ^[3]

Sir John MacDonald Kinneir (1782-1830), was Lieutenant-Colonel H.E.I.C.S., traveller and diplomatist, born at Carnden, Linlithgow, on 3 Feb. 1782, and was the son of John Macdonald, comptroller of customs at Borrowstounness, and Mrs. Cecilia Maria Kinneir. "In 1802 he was nominated to a cadetship by Sir William Bensley, under the name of Macdonald, which he retained in the Indian army lists up to his death. A few years later he published a 'Narrative of Travels in Asia Minor, Armenia, and Kurdistan in 1813-1814, with Remarks on the Marches of Alexander the Great and of the Ten Thousand Greeks' (London, 1818). From the title-page of the volume it appears that Macdonald had at this time taken his mother's surname of Kinneir, although there is no record in the India office of his change of name." ^[4]

During the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries, Scotland was ravaged by religious conflict. The newly found passionate fervour of Presbyterianism and the Church of Scotland rejected all who could not pass "The Test" of taking an oath of belief in the Church. Those failing the "Test" were frequently hanged, drawn and quartered in the High Street, or, more kindly, banished to the Colonies, to Australia or to the Carolinas.

Meanwhile, the Roman Church still fought to retain its status. Many Clansmen were freely "encouraged" to migrate to Ireland. From 1603 to 1790, Scottish Clans and families were recruited from the English Scottish border and north of Edinburgh to populate northern Ireland with Protestant stock faithful to the new religion of the crown. Many heads of families migrated from Scotland to Ireland during this period. In Ireland they settled in County Wexford where they used the name McEnire, and Kinnear.

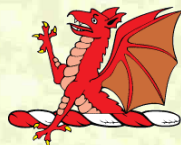

The migration or banishment to the New World also continued, some went voluntarily from Ireland, but most went directly from Scotland, their home territories. Some also moved to the European continent. They sailed to the New World across the stormy Atlantic aboard the small sailing ships known as the "White Sails." These overcrowded ships, sometimes spending two months at sea, were racked with disease, sometimes landing with only 60 percent of their original passenger lists.

Kenner

The practice of using symbols to represent people is ancient, and in Scotland it evolved into a complex system of armory. Although greatly influenced by England's example, Scotland's heraldic tradition also developed on its own, and there are many devices that are uniquely, and sometimes, exclusively Scottish.

An Achievement of Arms such as the Kenner arms depicted on the left typically consists of these parts: the Escrolls, displaying the family motto and name, the family crest (if any) seen above the helmet, the actual Coat of arms (also known as 'arms,' or 'the shield'), the Helmet depicted below the crest, the Torse on top of the helmet, and the Mantle draped from the helmet. Each of these elements will be described below. Supporters were a later addition to the Achievement; they are somewhat rare, and are usually personal to the grantee.

MANTLE OF KENNER

The mantle was spread over and draped from the helmet and served as a protection, 'to repel the extremities of wet, cold, and heat, and to preserve the armour from rust.' The numerous cuts and slits suggest that it had been torn and hacked on the field of battle. The style or design of the mantling is up to the individual heraldic artist, and it is usually depicted in the main color and metal from the shield. The helmet (or Helm) varied in shape in different ages and countries, often depicting rank. The Esquire's Helm, as depicted here, is generally shown silver, with a closed visor and facing to the dexter (its right). On top of the helmet is a Torse or wreath which was formed by two pieces of silk twisted together. Its purpose was to hold the crest and mantle on the Helm.

MOTTO

The motto was originally a war cry or slogan. Mottoes first began to be shown with arms in the 14th and 15th centuries, but were not in general use until the 17th century. Thus the oldest coats of arms generally do not include a motto. Mottoes seldom form part of the grant of arms: Under most heraldic authorities, a motto is an optional component of the coat of arms, and can be added to or changed at will; many families have chosen not to display a motto.

The motto for the Kenner coat of arms displayed here is:

I LIVE IN HOPE

SHIELD

Shields (or Escutcheons) at first were painted simply with one or more bands of color or 'ordinaries'. Later, the ordinaries were used in conjunction with other figures or symbols. The Coat of Arms for the surname Kenner can be described as follows:

KENNER ARMS

A black shield with three canaries proper on a gold bend.

BLACK SHIELD

Sable (Archaic or literary English for black), the coldest of the colors, corresponds to lead. Black, or "sable," is symbolic of sadness. It also corresponds with winter and is a humble color, suitable for the deeply religious. It denotes the qualities of knowledge, piety, serenity and work. Engravers represent it with numerous horizontal and vertical lines crossing each other.

Symbolic Virtues: Sable symbolizes the virtues of prudence and wisdom. The bearer of sable is obliged to protect widows and to guard the possessions of those who are absent. It is associated with serenity, pity and grief.

Precious Stone: Diamond

Planet: Saturn

Obligations: Protect widows and guard the possessions of those who are absent.

THREE

"Three" devices, beasts or ordinaries of the same have a special significance in heraldry.

First of all, there is the obvious reference to the Trinity in the design that would signify observance of the Christian doctrine.

Secondly, with many Arms it brings balance that is steeped in tradition. To better understand this latter scenario, we must look at the evolution of shield in personal armory. Kite shields that were the most popular from the the 10th-14th century evolved into Heater shields that had flat tops c. 1250. This was the time of heraldry's beginnings and when "three" objects were used for balance in each corner of the shield.

Later, with the advent of the "chief," "chevron" and "bend" three devices brought balance to these ordinaries too.

PROPER

The term "proper" describes a charge, or a symbol on a crest or shield, depicted in its natural colors.

GOLD

"Or" (from the French word for gold) is the tincture of Gold, or in heraldic terms "or," was considered the noblest color.

One of only two metals used in heraldry, it exceeds all others in value, purity and finesse. It represents the light of the sun, and was once borne only by princes. Gold is said to gladden the heart and destroy all works of magic. It is also associated with excellence and achievement, and the bearer surpasses all others in valor.

It is represented on coats of arms by the color yellow, and in engravings by a dotted pattern.

BEND

The bend is a broad, diagonal band across the shield representing either a scarf worn like a sash, or the shield suspender of a knight or military commander. It has often been granted to those who have distinguished themselves as commodores.

The bend signifies defense and protection, and is "a bearing of high honour, and probably represents either the scarf of the shield suspender of a knight or military commander. It was, like most other bearings, at first assumed by men of knightly and military rank, and it has since often been granted by the heralds to those who have distinguished themselves as commanders." ^[9]

Unless it is specified otherwise the bend is assumed to go from the upper left corner (dexter, chief in heraldic terms) of a shield to the lower right (sinister base). The Bend Sinister follows the opposite diagonal and is equally as honourable as the Bend Dexter and denotes the "badge of honour for a commander. A great many people who have paid no attention to heraldry speak of the 'bend sinister' as though it meant a mark of illegitimacy, but it is really nothing of the kind." ^[9]

According to old theorists the bend should occupy one third of the surface of a shield, though it is usually drawn slightly more narrowly than this. A charge half the width of a bend is termed a bendlet, and if six or eight of these pieces occurs on a shield it is termed 'bendy.'

The bend sinister has been used occasionally as a mark of illegitimacy though this is not commonly the case. More often a bendlet sinister is used, or a baton sinister, which is a bendlet that does not extend to the very edges of the shield.

THE CREST

The Crest was worn on top of the helmet, and was usually made of wood, metal, or boiled leather. It provided the double advantage of easy identification and the addition of height to the wearer. The Crest for the surname Kenner is described as follows:

THE KENNER CREST

TWO CROSSED ANCHORS.

ANCHORS

ANCHORS

The Anchor is the emblem of salvation and hope and an appropriate device for the coat of arms of a family with a seafaring tradition.

"Cosmo de' Medici, Duke of Etruria, bore as a device two anchors, with the motto "Duabus," meaning, it was good to have two holdfasts to trust to." ^[9]

It is a common figure in the English armory. A device steeped in tradition, it was once born by King Richard I. Interestingly, other bearings related to ships including rudders, sails, boats and ship's wheels rarely appear in heraldry.

VIMY RIDGE

During World War I Vimy Ridge fell under German control in 1914 in the race to secure the sea. For the next few years the Franco-British and German forces attempted to outflank each other, with many casualties on both sides, by 1916 the British relieved the French Tenth Army, soon after they discovered the Germans tunnelling companies had tunnels and deep mines from which they would attack, the Royal Engineers tried to combat the German mining operations intensifying the battle. In 1916 Canadian Corps relieved troops along the western slopes of Vimy Ridge in October 1916.

For the first time all four divisions of the Canadian Expeditionary Force would fight together, combined with the British 5th Division this brought 170,000 men together, 97,184 were Canadian. The Canadian Corps were to capture the German-held high ground of Vimy Ridge, by February 1917 preparations began for an attack. British tunnelling companies created extensive underground networks and fortifications, including 13 secret mines under German positions. In February 637 Canadians were lost in trench raiding, raids between each side were being conducted nightly with an additional 1,400 casualties. At 5.30am on the 9th April 1917 the Canadian Corps began firing every artillery piece at their disposal at the Germans, with the aid of the British and French by the 12th April 1917 the Canadian Corps was in firm control of the ridge. 100 ha (250-acre) portion of the former battleground serves as a memorial park and site of the Canadian National Vimy Memorial.
