The first family in ancient Scotland to use the name Gray was part of a tribe called the Boernicians. Gray is a name for a person who had gray hair. In Scotland, the surname Gray actually came from two different derivations. As a nickname, it came from the Gaelic word "riabhach," which means "gray." As a habitation name, it derived from the place named Graye, in Calvados. This place-name came from the Gallo-Roman personal name, Gratus, which means welcome or pleasing. Gray is therefore a nickname and a habitation name, which belongs to the category of hereditary surnames.

ANCIENT HISTORY

Though shrouded by the mists of time, the early records of Scotland reveal that the name Gray is of Norman origin, introduced to the region after the Norman Conquest of England in the 11th century. The earliest records of the name Gray was found in Northumberland, with Anschatel Groy of Haute Saone, Normandy, who fought with William the Conqueror in 1066 AD. After the conquest, Anschatel Groy settled in Chillingham, Northumberland. He was from the department of Haute Saone called Gray, sometimes Groy, or Croy, in Normandy. From this house sprang the Grays of Suffolk, Kent, Tankerville, and Stamford. Some of the earliest records of the name include: Richard de Grey (born c. 1140); and his son, Sir Henry de Grey of Grays Thurrock, Essex (1155-1219), a favourite courtier of King John of England; and his son, Richard de Grey (died 1271) of Codnor, Derbyshire, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports in 1258; and his brother Sir John de Grey (died 1266), an English soldier and High Sheriff of Bedfordshire and Buckinghamshire (1238-1239) and of High Sheriff of Herefordshire (1252-1253).

John de Gray (died 1214) was Bishop of Norwich in Norfolk, and later became Archbishop of Canterbury, but was never confirmed. Backworth in Northumberland was home to one branch of the family. "This place formerly belonged to Tynemouth priory, and afterwards to the Grey family, by whom it was sold to the late Duke of Northumberland, for £95,000."<sup>[1]</sup>

Barcombe in Sussex was another ancient family seat. "It comprises 3106 acres, whereof 305

are common or waste; and is bounded on the east by the river Ouse, on which is a flour-mill that has existed since the Conquest, and has been for more than a century in the possession of the family of Mr. Russell Gray, who has also established an extensive oilmill at an expense of £10,000." <sup>[1]</sup>

SPELLING VARIATIONS

Many alternate spellings of the name occurred in the manuscripts researched. Your name, Gray, was found in many references, but the records also included variations such as Gray, Grey, Groy, Croy and Graye, and others. Scribes recorded and spelled the name as it sounded; so it was not unlikely, for a person to be born with one spelling, married with another, and buried with yet another written on his or her headstone.

The Normans were descended from the Vikings that raided Northern France in the late 9th and early 10th centuries. From England the Normans spread north to Scotland. The Scottish King, Malcolm Canmore was established as a vassal of William's and Norman influence gradually worked its way into Scotland. The surname Gray emerged as a notable Scottish family name in Northumberland where they were recorded as a family of great antiquity seated with manor and estates in that shire. The first bearer of the name on record in Scotland is Hugo de Gray, who was listed as a witness in a charter in the year 1248. In that same year, the Chillingham branch moved north. Hugh Gray settled in Berwickshire and John Gray became the Mayor of Berwick in 1250. Henry Gray rendered homage to King Edward I of England on his brief conquest of Scotland in 1296. Sir Thomas Gray of Lanarkshire was an important historian of early border life. The Grays became more prominent in Scottish life and became a fully fledged Scottish Clan of great dignity.

EARLY NOTABLES

Notable among the family at this time was Andrew Gray, 1st Lord Gray (c.1390-1469), a Scottish nobleman, politician and diplomat; Sir Andrew Gray (d. 1445) of Fowlis, Perthshire; Sir John Grey KG (c.1387-1439), English nobleman and soldier; Edmund Grey (1416-1490), English nobleman; Thomas Grey KG (1451-1501), 7th Baron Ferrers of Groby, 1st Earl of Huntingdon, and 1st Marquess of Dorset, an English nobleman and courtier; George Grey, 2nd Earl of Kent (1454-1505), the son of Edmund Grey, 1st Earl of Kent and Lady Katherine Percy, was the Second Earl of Kent from 1490 to 1505; Nicholas Grey (c.1590-1660), English headmaster of Eton College, born in London; Henry Grey, 1st Earl of Stamford (c.1599-1673), known as the Lord Grey of Groby, an English nobleman and military leader; Edward Grey (1611-1676), an English politician who sat in the House of Commons from 1660 to 1676; Thomas Grey, Lord Grey of Groby (c. 1623-1657), an elected Member of Parliament for Leicester during the English Long Parliament, an active member of the Parliamentary party and a regicide; William Grey, 1st Baron Grey of Werke (died 1674), an English politician who sat in the House of Commons from 1621 to 1622, supporter of the Parliamentary cause in the English Civil War.

We will now take a moment to explore in more some of the early notables.

Andrew Gary, first Lord Gray (1380?-1469.) He was "the only son of Sir Andrew Gray of Fowlis, Perthshire, by his first wife, Janet, daughter of Sir Roger de Mortimer, whom he married in 1377. He is usually styled second Lord Gray, and the creation of the title is said to have taken place in 1437 in the person of his father. But this is now recognised as a mistake (Burke, Peerage, voce 'Moray'). The title was not created until 1445. Sir Andrew Gray, who died before 17 July 1445, is referred to by his son Andrew in a charter of that date, as well as in a later deed, dated 16 Jan. 1449-50, as deceased, and under the designation merely of Sir Andrew Gray, knight, the rank he held at the time of his deathmerely of Sir Andrew Gray, knight, the rank he held at the time of his death. Andrew Gray the Younger of Fowlis was accepted in 1424 by the English government as one of the hostages for the payment of the ransom of James I of Scotland, apparently in place of his father, whose estate is estimated at the time as being worth six hundred merks yearly. His father presented a letter to the English government, in which the hostage is said to be his only son and heir, promising fidelity on behalf of his son, and also that he would not disinherit him on account of his acting as a hostage (Fœdera, Hague ed. iv. pt. iv. 112). Young Gray was then sent to the castle of Pontefract, and was afterwards committed to the custody of the constable of the Tower of London, with whom he remained until 1427, when he was exchanged for Malcolm Fleming, son of the laird of Cumbernauld. " [2]

Patrick Gray of Buttergask, fourth Lord Gray (d. 1582), was connected with the English historic family of Grey, the earliest settler of the name in Scotland being a younger son of Lord Grey of Chillingham, Northumberland, who in the reign of William the Lion received from his father the lands of Broxmouth, Roxburghshire. The Scottish branch afterwards had their chief seat at Castle Huntly, Forfarshire. Patrick, fourth lord Gray, was the eldest son of Gilbert Gray of Buttergask, second son of Andrew, second lord Gray, lord justice-general of Scotland. [2]

Patrick Gray, sixth Lord Gray (d. 1612), commonly known as the 'Master of Gray,' was the eldest son of Patrick, fifth Lord Gray, by his wife Barbara, fourth daughter of William, Lord Ruthven.

Andrew Gray seventh Lord Gray (d. 1663), was the eldest son of Patrick, sixth Lord Gray (q. v.), better known as Master of Gray, and his second wife, Lady Mary Stewart. He succeeded as Lord Gray in 1612, and on 22 Feb. 1614 received a crown charter of the lands of Fowlis and others to himself and his wife, Margaret Ogilvie, daughter of Walter, lord Deskford, and relict of James, earl of Buchan. On the re-formation of the company of Scots gens d'armes in France in 1624, under the captaincy of Lord Gordon, earl of Enzie, Gray was appointed lieutenant, and rendered considerable service in the French wars of that period. In 1628 Gray subscribed, with several other Scottish barons, a submission in reference to his teinds in favour of Charles I at Whitehall. He was also prevailed upon by the king to resign his hereditary sheriffship of Forfarshire for fifty thousand merks (about 2,900l. sterling), and obtained the king's bond for that sum, but the money was never paid. In 1628, also, Charles ordered the Scottish council of war to admit Gray as one of their number, whose affection to his service he attests; and in 1630 Gray sat as one of the Scottish parliamentary commissioners on the Fisheries Treaty. When Charles took arms against the Scots in 1639 he employed Gray, then on leave of absence from service in France, to obtain information about the progress of his opponents in Scotland. Gray met the king at York on his return, and reported the advance of the covenanters upon Berwick and their strength. On 29 May he received a passport 'to repair to his charge under the French king,' in whose service at that time he commanded a regiment of a thousand foot. [2]

Reginald de Grey, third Lord Grey of Ruthin (1362?-1440), was the eldest surviving son and heir of Reginald, second baron Grey of Ruthin, and of his wife Eleanor, daughter of Lord Strange of Blackmere, and the grandson therefore of Roger de Grey (q. v.), the first baron. Sir John de Grey (d. 1266), the English judge, was second son of Henry de Grey, first baron Grey of Codnor, by his wife Isolda, the eldest of the nieces of Robert Bardolf, and possibly related to Walter de Grey, Archbishop of York (q.v.)

Walter de Grey (d. 1255), archbishop of York, was probably a younger son of John and Hawisia de Grey of Rotherfield, Oxfordshire (Baker, Northamptonshire, i. 140; Nichols, Leicestershire, iii. 682); but, according to Dugdale, he was son of Henry and Isolda de Grey of Thurrock, Essex (Baronage, p. 769). In either case he was a member of a family of high position. Educated at Oxford, where, it is said, he attended the lectures of Edmund Rich (q. v.), afterwards archbishop of Canterbury, he retained a strong affection for the university, became one of its benefactors, and annual masses, at which all regent masters were bound to be present, were said in memory of him.

John de Grey, second Lord Grey of Wilton (1268-1323), was the grandson of John de Grey (d. 1266) (q. v.), and the son of Reginald de Grey, the first lord Grey of Wilton. The father, having been justice of Chester, received in 1282 a grant of the castle of Ruthin, with the cantreds of Duffryn Clwyd and Englefield (Tegeingl), in the marches of North Wales.

Roger Grey, first Lord Grey of Ruthin (d. 1353), was the younger son of John de Grey (1268-1323) (q. v.), second lord Grey of Wilton, but the eldest by his second wife (Dugdale, Baronage, i. 716). Courthope (Historic Peerage, p. 226) by mistake describes him as younger son of John, third lord Grey of Codnor (1305-1392) (q. v.)

People began to leave Scotland to escape political problems and economic hardship. There was much emigration to Ireland where land was confiscated from the Catholic Irish and given to English and Scottish settlers for political reasons. In 1890, a birth census of Scottish families in Ireland was taken. From that census, it was estimated that there were over 5,242 people bearing the surname Gray throughout Ireland; about 59 percent were living in the province of Ulster where the families were found in Antrim, Down, and Londonderry. <sup>[3]</sup>

The New World beckoned next and though many went from Ireland, most came directly from Scotland. They sailed aboard the fleet of sailing ships known as the "White Sails" but small pox, dysentery, cholera and typhoid took its toll and many of the overcrowded ships arrived with only 60 or 70 percent of their passengers.

SYMBOLISM

The practice of using symbols to represent people is ancient, and in Scotland it evolved into a complex system of armory. Although greatly influenced by England's example, Scotland's heraldic tradition also developed on its own, and there are many devices that are uniquely, and sometimes, exclusively Scottish.

An Achievement of Arms such as the Gray arms depicted on the left typically consists of these parts: the Escrolls, displaying the family motto and name, the family crest (if any) seen above the helmet, the actual Coat of arms (also known as 'arms,' or 'the shield'), the Helmet depicted below the crest, the Torse on top of the helmet, and the Mantle draped from the helmet. Each of these elements will be described below. Supporters were a later addition to the Achievement; they are somewhat rare, and are usually personal to the grantee.

MANTLE OF GRAY

The mantle was spread over and draped from the helmet and served as a protection, 'to repel the extremities of wet, cold, and heat, and to preserve the armour from rust.' The numerous cuts and slits suggest that it had been torn and hacked on the field of battle. The style or design of the mantling is up to the individual heraldic artist, and it is usually depicted in the main color and metal from the shield. The helmet (or Helm) varied in shape in different ages and countries, often depicting rank. The Esquire's Helm, as depicted here, is generally shown silver, with a closed visor and facing to the dexter (its right). On top of the helmet is a Torse or wreath which was formed by two pieces of silk twisted together. Its purpose was to hold the crest and mantle on the Helm.

The motto was originally a war cry or slogan. Mottoes first began to be shown with arms in the 14th and 15th centuries, but were not in general use until the 17th century. Thus the oldest coats of arms generally do not include a motto. Mottoes seldom form part of the grant of arms: Under most heraldic authorities, a motto is an optional component of the coat of arms, and can be added to or changed at will; many families have chosen not to display a motto.

The motto for the Gray coat of arms displayed here is:

ANCHOR FAST ANCHOR

SHIELD

Shields (or Escutcheons) at first were painted simply with one or more bands of color or 'ordinaries'. Later, the ordinaries were used in conjunction with other figures or symbols. The Coat of Arms for the surname Gray can be described as follows:

THE GRAY SHIELD

GRAY ARMS

A red shield with a silver lion, within a silver border engrailed.

RED SHIELD

Gules, derived from an Old French word goules or gueules meaning "throats" translates into modern English as "red" and is the military color for excellence and fortitude. It is symbolic of nobility, boldness and ferocity, and can also represent fire and summer. Some ancient laws restricted its use to princes and their families. Red corresponds to the metal copper and is denoted in engravings by numerous perpendicular lines.

Symbolic Virtues: Red denotes the virtues of charity and courage, and indicates the qualities of valor, patriotism, and creative power. Those who bear a red insignia are obliged to right wrongs and win fame in arms.

Precious Stone: Carnelian, Ruby

Planet: Mars

Obligations: To right wrongs and win fame in arms

SILVER

Argent (from the French for silver), or Silver is one of the two metals used in heraldry. It is usually represented on a shield by the colors gray or white.

This metal represents nobility, peace and serenity. It is associated with the qualities of purity and chastity, because the metal withstands the test of fire.

LION

The lion has always held a high place in heraldry as the emblem of deathless courage, and, hence, that of a valiant warrior. It is said to be a lively image of a good soldier, who must be "valiant in courage, strong of body, politic in council and a foe to fear."

Through the somewhat dubious legend of their compassion, lions also came to symbolize Christ. As one medieval author asserted, "they prey on men rather than women, and they do not kill children except when they are very hungry."

The Lion, with such repute of its noble nature and having the position and title of king of the beasts, is naturally one of the most common heraldic symbols on the continent of Europe. The winged lion is the emblem of St. Mark.

"The earliest example to be found is on the seal of Philip I., Duke of Flanders, in 1164. " <sup>[16]</sup>

BORDER

The bordure or border is, as it sounds, a fairly wide border around the outside of a shield. Except for in more modern grants where the border is an original part of the shield, there is little doubt that the border is either a mark of cadency, displaying the status of a younger son or brother, or a mark of illegitimacy.

The border is no longer used for these purposes; except for in England where a border wavy is still a mark of illegitimacy and the border compony serves the same purpose in Scotland.

This is by no means a mark of dishonor, though; it is merely a heraldic tradition carried over from the days when it was necessary to distinguish the rightful heirs from others who might have some claim to the family title and fortune.

The Orle or Tressure is the diminutive of a border and looks like the frame of a shield within the shield rather than a border. It is typically borne in the arms of Scotland, and was held to be the emblem of Preservation and Protection.

"It is needless to credit the legend as to this tressure having anciently given to Achaius, King of Scots, by Charlemagne, in order to signify the French lilies should defend the Scottish lion. The Double Tressure in the arms of Scotland was first assumed by Robert Stuart, to testify his approval of the alliance which he had renewed with King Charles V. of France. " <sup>[17]</sup>

It is about half the width of a border. When charges are placed around the outside of it they are said to be 'in orle.' It was used as a mark to distinguish the arms of one branch of a family from those of another, and in some cases the orle was used as a symbol of honor.

ENGRAILED

An engrailed line of partition has an edge drawn with a row of many sharp little waves.

THE CREST

The Crest was worn on top of the helmet, and was usually made of wood, metal, or boiled leather. It provided the double advantage of easy identification and the addition of height to the wearer. The Crest for the surname Gray is described as follows:

THE GRAY CREST

A GOLD ANCHOR.

GOLD

GOLD

"Or" (from the French word for gold) is the tincture of Gold, or in heraldic terms "or," was considered the noblest color.

One of only two metals used in heraldry, it exceeds all others in value, purity and finesse. It represents the light of the sun, and was once borne only by princes. Gold is said to gladden the heart and destroy all works of magic. It is also associated with excellence and achievement, and the bearer surpasses all others in valor.

It is represented on coats of arms by the color yellow, and in engravings by a dotted pattern.

ANCHOR

ANCHOR

The Anchor is the emblem of salvation and hope and an appropriate device for the coat of arms of a family with a seafaring tradition.

"Cosmo de' Medici, Duke of Etruria, bore as a device two anchors, with the motto "Duabus," meaning, it was good to have two holdfasts to trust to."<sup>[17]</sup>

It is a common figure in the English armory. A device steeped in tradition, it was once born by King Richard I. Interestingly, other bearings related to ships including rudders, sails, boats and ship's wheels rarely appear in heraldry.

Here is a listing of some of the sources consulted when researching British surnames. The resources below directly or indirectly influenced the authors of our surname histories. We have most of these titles in our library, others we have borrowed or had access to. Source materials have been chosen for their reliability and authenticity. Our research into surnames is ongoing, and we are continually adding to our source library. For each surname history, we seek and refer to sources specific to the surname; these are generally not included in the list below.
