The history of the name Holman goes back those Anglo-Saxon tribes that once ruled over Britain. Such a name was given to a "holy man," typically a priest or friar. ^[1]

The surname Holman originally derived from the Old English word "Hol" or "Hool." Another reference claims the name was derived from the Old English words "holh" + "mann" and literally meant "dweller by a hollow." ^[2]

And another source claims the name was "a contraction of Holyman; but is more likely to be "whole man," a man of sterling mettle. It must be recollected that in medieval English whole was spelt without the w, and the commonest form of this name in the XIV. and XV. cent. is Holeman." ^[3]

ANCIENT HISTORY

After studying the ancient manuscripts, historians discovered the Holman surname to be of Anglo-Saxon origin.

Documents such as the Domesday Book, compiled in 1086 for William I of England (William the Conqueror), have revealed the first recorded instances of the Holman surname. Evidence suggests that the name Holman was first found in Essex, where one of the first records of the name was John Holman, Holeman who was listed in the Subsidy Rolls of 1327. ^[2]

A search through the Hundredorum Rolls of 1273 proved to be fruitful: Walter Halloman, Lincolnshire; and William Holyman, Lincolnshire. The Yorkshire Poll Tax Rolls of 1379 included entries for Adam Holman, marchautit; and Thomas Halman. ^[1]

The source, Feodarium Prioratus Dunelmensis (Surtees Society included an entry for Robert Halyman, Yorkshire, but no date was provided. And the Calendar of Proceedings in Chancery, temp. Elizabeth I., included an entry for Digorie Holman, temp. Elizabeth. ^[1] All of the aforementioned held lands in their respective shires.

SPELLING VARIATIONS

Throughout the records the Holman surname was found with various spellings, such as Holman, Hollman and Holeman and these changes in spelling even occurred in references to the same person. Even such literate people as Shakespeare would sign their name with different spellings. Some variations resulted from the influence of court languages such as Latin and French on the spelling of a name. In general, however, people paid more attention to how a name was pronounced, not to how people thought it should be spelled.

The Holman family descended from a culture which shaped England more than any other. Coming to England in the 5th century, the Angles and Saxons dominated the countryside by force and pushed the native Britons into Wales. Angles and Saxons were independent tribes, but their common Germanic heritage meant that their language and customs were similar. Early Germanic society was made up of groups of families uniting around a chieftain or king. This social unit tended to remain small unless bands grouped together to accomplish a certain task, such as a war with another group. These groups would then break up after the task was complete. Anglo-Saxon Britain was divided into a bewildering number of kingdoms, some only short lived, until unification under Egbert in the 9th century. Even with the merging of Angle and Saxon kingdoms, true cohesion was not achieved until after the Norman conquest.

After the successful Norman invasion of 1066 Anglo-Saxon rule came to an end. Despite this, the culture of the common man was largely an Anglo-Saxon culture. However, politics and high society was to be dominated by the Norman French. William the Conqueror (c. 1028-1087) abolished the great earldoms which had existed under the Anglo-Saxon rulers, thus removing a major source of domestic turmoil. English society ceased to resemble the old tribal structure consisting of bands of families grouped around different leaders. England was slowly developing into a nation.

The Holman family was also facing a period of development, and was found in Worcestershire, where they were recorded as a family of great antiquity seated with manor and estates in that shire. Robert Holeman was recorded as a wealthy land-owner in Worcestershire, and by 1307 they had also acquired estates in Essex to the south. By the 15th century they had also branched to the west of England in Devon and acquired estates in Banbury, Oxfordshire. They flourished on their estates for several centuries.

Other early records including Brand's History of Newcastle-on-Tyne show 'To Robert Halyman, of Newcastle, yeoman, the next vacation of the free chapel of St. Catherine' in

1531. Lionel Holyman, Magd. Hall (of London) was listed in the Register of the University of Oxford in 1582. In London, Anthony Allin and Mary Holliman were married at St. Michael, Cornhill in 1628. ^[1]

They later settled in Godeston in Surrey. Their present families seats are at Dunley Manor, Martin Hoe, and Hyes.

EARLY NOTABLES

Notable members of the family include Philip Holman (c. 1593-1669), an English merchant and politician who sat in the House of Commons in 1659, High Sheriff of Northamptonshire in 1638; Philip Holman, High Sheriff of Herefordshire in 1633; and Sir John Holman, 1st Baronet (ca. 1633-1700), an English politician who sat in the House of Commons between 1661 and 1685.

William Holman (d. 1730), English antiquary, a congregational minister at Stepney, Middlesex, whence he was transferred to Halstead, Essex, in 1700. ^[4]

The Holman family survived the Middle Ages, despite famine, plagues, and the trials of daily life. However, in the 17th century political and religious upheaval forced many families to leave England. During this period the middle class was gaining in power and importance, and for the first time was ready to assert itself in Parliament. The power-struggle which resulted divided the country into two very powerful factions. This century also saw renewed tensions between the Protestants and the Catholics. Together these conflicts were enough to drive families from their homeland.

In Ireland Protestant settlers and the followers of Cromwell were granted lands taken from the native Irish. Other families came to Ireland simply to escape their war-torn home. In Ireland, they settled in County Westmeath where the name was changed to Homan.

Turmoil at home made the New World appear attractive to many families in England. They immigrated to Canada, the United States, Australia, and some moved to continental Europe. Members of the Holman family risked the hazardous voyage to start a new life in new lands. This decision to emigrate was never made casually, for while there were hardships at home, the journey across the sea was so perilous that up to forty percent of a ships' passengers would not reach their destination.

Canada was one of the destinations selected by immigrants. Canada was at first a French colony, but, it was inevitable that the French empire be challenged. At the end of the Seven Years War, in 1763, Canada was ceded to the British. Soon after this the first large group of English speaking migrants arrived in Canada. United Empire Loyalists arrived in the decades during and following the American Revolution. Most of the Loyalists settled in Nova Scotia and the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes region. It was not until nearly a century after this that Canada began to develop into the great nation it is today. By the mid 19th century, land opportunities and the building of the railroads allowed immigrants to settle the west.

The Ancient Arms of

Holman

The practice of representing people with symbols is ancient, and in England this habit evolved with feudal society into a system of distinctive devices on shields. The heralds developed an extensive armory that had the important function of distinguishing members of the upper class from each other, whether at court or on the battlefield. Since then, heraldry has grown into a complex field with many rules and a terminology that requires some knowledge to interpret.

An Achievement of Arms such as the Holman arms depicted on the left typically consists of these parts: the Escrolls, displaying the family motto and name, the family crest (if any) seen above the helmet, the actual Coat of arms (also known as 'arms,' or 'the shield'), the Helmet depicted below the crest, the Torse on top of the helmet, and the Mantle draped from the helmet. Each of these elements will be described below. Supporters were a later addition to the Achievement; they are somewhat rare, and are usually personal to the grantee.

MANTLE OF HOLMAN

The mantle was spread over and draped from the helmet and served as a protection, 'to repel the extremities of wet, cold, and heat, and to preserve the armour from rust.' The numerous cuts and slits suggest that it had been torn and hacked on the field of battle. The style or design of the mantling is up to the individual heraldic artist, and it is usually depicted in the main color and metal from the shield. The helmet (or Helm) varied in shape in different ages and countries, often depicting rank. The Esquire's Helm, as depicted here, is generally shown silver, with a closed visor and facing to the dexter (its right). On top of the helmet is a Torse or wreath which was formed by two pieces of silk twisted together. Its purpose was to hold the crest and mantle on the Helm.

MOTTO

The motto was originally a war cry or slogan. Mottoes first began to be shown with arms in the 14th and 15th centuries, but were not in general use until the 17th century. Thus the oldest coats of arms generally do not include a motto. Mottoes seldom form part of the grant of arms: Under most heraldic authorities, a motto is an optional component of the coat of arms, and can be added to or changed at will; many families have chosen not to display a motto.

The coat of arms displayed here for the surname Holman did not include a motto.

SHIELD

Shields (or Escutcheons) at first were painted simply with one or more bands of color or 'ordinaries'. Later, the ordinaries were used in conjunction with other figures or symbols. The Coat of Arms for the surname Holman can be described as follows:

THE HOLMAN SHIELD

HOLMAN ARMS

A green shield with a gold chevron between three silver pheons.

GREEN SHIELD

GREEN SHIELD

"Vert" (from the French word for green) signifies felicity and pleasure. It was symbolic of joy, youth and beauty. Green was also associated with the spring. The bearer of the green is obliged to defend the peasant and all who work on the land. It is expressed in engravings by lines in bend, or slanting to the right.

Symbolic Virtues: Green denotes the virtues of charity and hope, as well as the qualities of honor, courtesy and abundance.

Precious Stone: Emerald

Planet: Venus

Obligations: To defend the peasant and all who work on the land

GOLD

"Or" (from the French word for gold) is the tincture of Gold, or in heraldic terms "or," was considered the noblest color.

One of only two metals used in heraldry, it exceeds all others in value, purity and finesse. It represents the light of the sun, and was once borne only by princes. Gold is said to gladden the heart and destroy all works of magic. It is also associated with excellence and achievement, and the bearer surpasses all others in valor.

It is represented on coats of arms by the color yellow, and in engravings by a dotted pattern.

CHEVRON

The Chevron occurs frequently in British and French heraldry, while it is comparatively rare in German heraldry. Traditionally the Chevron represents the roof of a house, derived from the French word "chevron" meaning rafter. It signifies protection. ^[9]

There is much disagreement about whether this Ordinary or the "bend" was the first design to appear on coats of arms.

The Chevron was granted to those who had participated in some notable enterprise, had built churches or fortresses, or had accomplished some work requiring faithful service.

Originally heralds drew the Chevron almost reaching the top of the shield, nearly covering shield surface. More recently, the Chevron is drawn lower and with a less acute inner angle to allow more devices to be represented more attractively, and the artist may draw the chevron at the height and angle that will best suit the accompanying charges. The chevronel, is the diminutive of the chevron and is much narrower. Chevronels may be stacked on top of each other or side-by-side at the same height, which is termed interlaced, or braced. A field composed entirely of an even number of chevrons is called "chevronny."

THREE

"Three" devices, beasts or ordinaries of the same have a special significance in heraldry.

First of all, there is the obvious reference to the Trinity in the design that would signify observance of the Christian doctrine.

Secondly, with many Arms it brings balance that is steeped in tradition. To better understand this latter scenario, we must look at the evolution of shield in personal armory. Kite shields that were the most popular from the the 10th-14th century evolved into Heater shields that had flat tops c. 1250. This was the time of heraldry's beginnings and when "three" objects were used for balance in each corner of the shield.

Later, with the advent of the "chief," "chevron" and "bend" three devices brought balance to these ordinaries too.

SILVER

Argent (from the French for silver), or Silver is one of the two metals used in heraldry. It is usually represented on a shield by the colors gray or white.

This metal represents nobility, peace and serenity. It is associated with the qualities of purity and chastity, because the metal withstands the test of fire.

PHEONS

The Pheon or Spear Head is a specific type of arrowhead of ancient origin, made of fine steel.

Broad Arrows looks the same as pheons but have a different origin. They are an ancient weapon of war, thrown by an engine. ^[10]

It is a cleverly designed weapon that was very dangerous since it has a barbed inner edge that makes extraction difficult.

It symbolizes dexterity and nimbleness of wit, as people with these traits are able to penetrate and understand complicated problems.

"Being apt and ready to pierce, according to some authors, they betoken a dexterity and nimbleness of wit to penetrate and understand matters of highest consequence." ^[11]

THE CREST

The Crest was worn on top of the helmet, and was usually made of wood, metal, or boiled leather. It provided the double advantage of easy identification and the addition of height to the wearer. The Crest for the surname Holman is described as follows:

A SILVER OSTRICH HEAD.

SILVER

SILVER

Argent (from the French for silver), or Silver is one of the two metals used in heraldry. It is usually represented on a shield by the colors gray or white.

This metal represents nobility, peace and serenity. It is associated with the qualities of purity and chastity, because the metal withstands the test of fire.

OSTRICH

OSTRICH

The image of an ostrich is symbolic of faith and contemplation. The ostrich is represented in heraldry in its natural form and is a very common charge, in fact it is one of the birds met with most often, after the eagle and the falcon.

Until recent times the ostrich was always depicted holding something in its beak such as a horseshoe or a key. The digestive capabilities of the ostrich have been fabulously exaggerated at times, and even now the ostrich has a popular reputation for being able to eat anything.

Early natural history books show it ingesting inedible food such as these metal objects, and it is possible that at one time ostriches were actually believed to eat these things. Even now an ostrich is seldom found without something present in its mouth.

HEAD

The Human Head stands for honor. After all, the Head is the center of knowledge, thinking and learning for the body.

"The heads of 'blackamoors' or negroes generally refer to deeds of prowess in the Crusades."^[9]
