The name Seymore was brought to England by the Normans when they conquered the country in 1066. The ancestors of the Seymore family lived in Monmouthshire. Their name, however, is a reference to St. Maur, near Avranches, Normandy. <sup>[1]</sup>

"The baronial family of St. Maur, founded by the warrior of Hastings, became extinct in the chief male line at the decease in 1499 of Richard, 6th Lord St. Maur, whose only daughter and heiress, Alice, wedded William, 6th Lord Zouche of Haryngworth. The Seymours, Dukes of Somerset, whose historic greatness needs little of ancestral aid to augment its glory, claim to be a scion of the baronial house, and their pretensions may be sustained by the valuable authority of Camden." <sup>[2]</sup>

ANCIENT HISTORY

Early records of the name Seymore in the chronicles of England show that the ancestors of the bearers of this name were of the Norman race. Researchers used such ancient manuscripts as the Domesday Book, the Ragman Rolls, the Wace poem, the Honour Roll of the Battel Abbey, the Curia Regis, Pipe Rolls, the Falaise Roll, tax records, baptismals, family genealogies, and local parish and church records to establish that the name Seymore was first found in Monmouthshire. However, records differ on who was the progenitor of the family. One reference claims that Wido de St. Maur came to England in 1066 but was deceased before 1086 and would have therefore not appeared in the Domesday Book. His son William Fits-Wido held a barony in Somerset, Wiltshire and Gloucester and ten manors in Somerset. <sup>[3]</sup>

"A Gilbertine priory, in honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded[in Poulton, Gloucestershire] about 1347, by Sir Thomas de Sancto Mauro, or Seymor." <sup>[4]</sup>

Another reference claims they were descended from Roger Sancto Maure who lived during the reign of Henry I and was Lord of Seymour Castle. <sup>[5]</sup>

SPELLING VARIATIONS

Your name, Seymore, occurred in many references, but from time to time, spellings included St. Maur, Seymour, Seymer, Seymar, Seamor, Seamour, Seemour and Seemore, and many others. Scribes recorded and spelled the name as it sounded. It was quite common that a person would be born with one spelling, married with another, and buried with a headstone which showed another spelling.

The Normans were commonly believed to be of French origin but, more accurately, they were of Viking origin. The Vikings, under their Jarl, Thorfinn Rollo, invaded France in about 911 A.D. After Rollo laid siege to Paris, the French King, Charles the Simple, finally conceded defeat, granting northern France to Rollo. Duke William who invaded and defeated England in 1066, was descended from Rollo, the first Duke of Normandy.

The surname Seymore emerged as a notable family name in Monmouthshire where they were recorded as a family of great antiquity, and also held the lordships of Woundy and Penhow in the same shire. The senior line was represented by the Duke of Somerset, but junior lines branched to Dorset, Wiltshire, Buckingham, Oxfordshire. Jane Seymour was the wife of Henry VIII. The family held many peerages and knighthoods. The many notables of this name include Thomas Seymour the Lord High Admiral of England who married Catherine Parr, King Henry VIII's last Queen. Edward Seymour, first Duke of Somerset was created Viscount Beauchamp and Earl of Hertford, he achieved great power under his brother-in-law Henry VIII.

"The Dukes of Somerset undoubtedly derive from William St. Maur, who in the thirteenth century possessed himself of Woundy and Penhow, where he took up his abode. 'The church of Penhow was dedicated to St. Maur ; their park there was called by their own name ; and here likewise they had their castle, which continued in the family till Henry VII.'s time."

"The seal of his son Roger (who died about 1299) shows the Vol* or Wings conjoined in Lure, still borne by his descendants, circumscribed Sigill Rogeri de Scitfior. In the time of Edward III. they removed from their Welsh home into Somersetshire, where they had acquired a share in the great Beauchamp inheritance through Cecily, the eldest and most richly dowered of the three heiresses of the last Lord Beauchamp of Hache, who was the wife of a second Roger de St. Maur. Both their son and grandson were again matched with heiresses. The former married Joan de la Mare; the latter Maud Esturmi (see Esturmi), who first transplanted the Seymours into Wiltshire. As the last representative of the ancient Foresters of Savernake, she was very richly dowered, and her house of Wolf Hall thenceforward became their home. Although their possessions thus grew apace, they remained unpretending country gentlemen, till, nearly a century and a half afterwards, by a sudden and violent transition of fortune, they rose, at a single bound, to the highest pinnacle of place and power."

"Sir John Seymour, who had been knighted for his bravery by Henry VII.'s own hand on the field of battle of Blackheath, and was no less distinguished at the Battle of the Spurs, became one of the Knights of the Body (now Grooms of the Chamber) to Henry VIII., and as such was in constant attendance at Court. His daughter Jane was placed in the household of Anne Boleyn, and attracted the attention of the King, who transferred the crown from the Queen to her maid of honour. He married her the day after poor Anne's head had fallen on the block ; and in the following year she became the mother of the anxiously expected Prince of Wales. She only survived his birth for twelve days : happy in dying thus early, before Henry's fierce love had turned to hate, with the bloom of her fair name 'untarnished by the breath of reproach,' honoured and lamented by all."

"The Seymours had participated in her fortunes, and risen with her rise. Her father died about six months after she became Queen; but her eldest brother Edward was created Viscount Beauchamp on her wedding day, with the grant of a coat of augmentation, bearing the Royal lions and fleur de lis, ever since quartered with the Seymour Vol, and Earl of Hertford on the birth of her son. Yet he was merely placing his foot on the first steps of the ladder, for his advancement kept pace with his ambition, great as that was, till, on the accession of his nephew, he was proclaimed Lord Protector of King Edward VI. and of the realm. At the same time he was created Duke of Somerset, 'whereby,' as the patent recites, 'the name of that family from which our most beloved mother, Jane, late Queen of England, drew her beginning, might not be clouded by any higher title or colour of dignity.' " <sup>[1]</sup>

EARLY NOTABLES

Outstanding amongst the family at this time was John Seymor, High Sheriff of Herefordshire in 1458.

Jane Seymour (1509?-1537), was "third queen of Henry VIII, was eldest of the eight children of Sir John Seymour of Wolf Hall, Savernake, Wiltshire, by Margaret, daughter of Sir John Wentworth of Nettlestead, Suffolk. Her mother's family claimed a distant relationship to the royal family." <sup>[6]</sup>

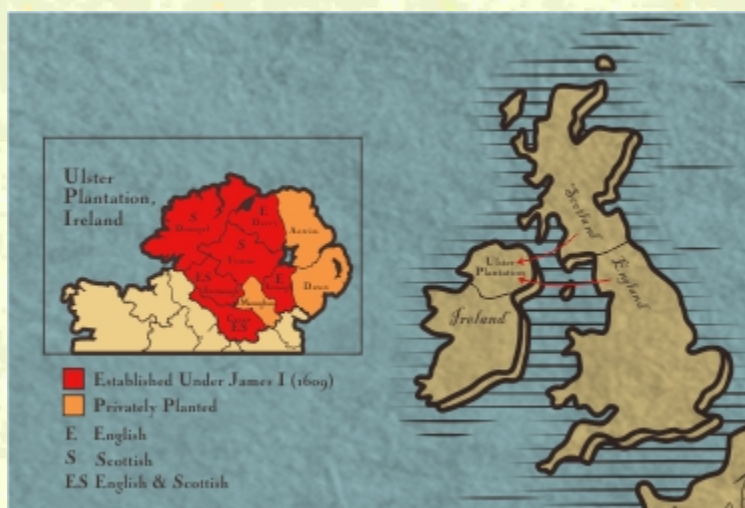

Sir John Seymour, of Wiltshire, KB (c.1474-1536), was English gentry, courtier to King Henry VIII, father of the king's wife Jane Seymour; Edward Seymour, 1st Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector of England 1547 to 1549; Sir Edward Seymour (1528-1593), of Berry Pomeroy, Sheriff of Devon, Sir Edward Seymour, of Berry Pomeroy, 1st Baronet (c.1563-1613), Member of Parliament for Devon, twice High Sheriff for Devon; Frances Seymour, Duchess of Somerset (1599-1674), (née Devereux), an English noblewoman; Sir John Seymour (died 1663), an English politician who sat in the House of Commons from 1646 to 1648; and Sir Edward Seymour, of Berry Pomeroy, 4th Baronet, MP (1632-1708), British nobleman.

During the 12th century many of these Norman families moved north to Scotland. Later, in the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries England was ravaged by religious and political conflict. The Monarchy, the Church and Parliament fought for supremacy.

In Ireland, settlers became known as the "Adventurers for Land in Ireland," where they "undertook" to keep the Protestant faith, occupying the lands of the Irish. In Ireland they settled in County Limerick at Highmount, and Castletown House in Kilkenny. In 1890, a birth census of English families in Ireland was taken. From that census, it was estimated that there were over 672 people bearing the surname Seymour throughout Ireland; about 26 percent were living in the province of Ulster.<sup>[7]</sup>

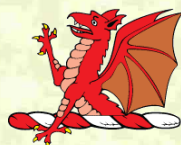

In North America, settlers bearing your surname or a spelling variation of the name include: William Seymour who settled in Virginia in 1653; George Seymour settled in Barbados in 1679; William Seymour settled in Maryland in 1725; John Seymer was banished to Barbados in 1685; Richard Seymour arrived in Virginia in 1607; 13 years before the "Mayflower."

HISTORIC EVENTS

There are 4 historic event entries in the Appendix.

Foy pour devoir

Seymore

The practice of representing people with symbols is ancient, and in England this habit evolved with feudal society into a system of distinctive devices on shields. The heralds developed an extensive armory that had the important function of distinguishing members of the upper class from each other, whether at court or on the battlefield. Since then, heraldry has grown into a complex field with many rules and a terminology that requires some knowledge to interpret.

An Achievement of Arms such as the Seymore arms depicted on the left typically consists of these parts: the Escrolls, displaying the family motto and name, the family crest (if any) seen above the helmet, the actual Coat of arms (also known as 'arms,' or 'the shield'), the Helmet depicted below the crest, the Torse on top of the helmet, and the Mantle draped from the helmet. Each of these elements will be described below. Supporters were a later addition to the Achievement; they are somewhat rare, and are usually personal to the grantee.

MANTLE OF SEYMORE

The mantle was spread over and draped from the helmet and served as a protection, 'to repel the extremities of wet, cold, and heat, and to preserve the armour from rust.' The numerous cuts and slits suggest that it had been torn and hacked on the field of battle. The style or design of the mantling is up to the individual heraldic artist, and it is usually depicted in the main color and metal from the shield. The helmet (or Helm) varied in shape in different ages and countries, often depicting rank. The Esquire's Helm, as depicted here, is generally shown silver, with a closed visor and facing to the dexter (its right). On top of the helmet is a Torse or wreath which was formed by two pieces of silk twisted together. Its purpose was to hold the crest and mantle on the Helm.

MOTTO

The motto was originally a war cry or slogan. Mottoes first began to be shown with arms in the 14th and 15th centuries, but were not in general use until the 17th century. Thus the oldest coats of arms generally do not include a motto. Mottoes seldom form part of the grant of arms: Under most heraldic authorities, a motto is an optional component of the coat of arms, and can be added to or changed at will; many families have chosen not to display a motto.

The motto for the Seymore coat of arms displayed here is:

FOY POUR DEVOIR

This translates as:

FAITH FOR DUTY.

SHIELD

Shields (or Escutcheons) at first were painted simply with one or more bands of color or 'ordinaries'. Later, the ordinaries were used in conjunction with other figures or symbols.

The Coat of Arms for the surname Seymore can be described as follows:

SEYMORE ARMS

Gold on a red pennant between six blue fleur-de-lis, three gold lions of England.

GOLD

"Or" (from the French word for gold) is the tincture of Gold, or in heraldic terms "or," was considered the noblest color.

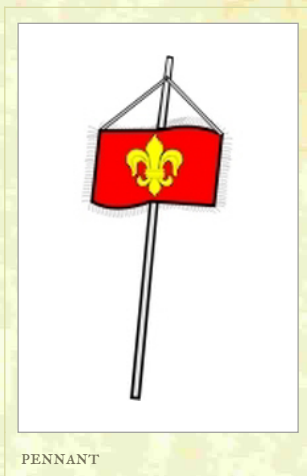

One of only two metals used in heraldry, it exceeds all others in value, purity and finesse. It represents the light of the sun, and was once borne only by princes. Gold is said to gladden the heart and destroy all works of magic. It is also associated with excellence and achievement, and the bearer surpasses all others in valor.

It is represented on coats of arms by the color yellow, and in engravings by a dotted pattern.

RED

Gules, derived from an Old French word goules or gueules meaning "throats" translates into modern English as "red" and is the military color for excellence and fortitude. It is symbolic of nobility, boldness and ferocity, and can also represent fire and summer. Some ancient laws restricted its use to princes and their families. Red corresponds to the metal copper and is denoted in engravings by numerous perpendicular lines.

PENNANT

The Banner or Flag is a sign of victory and self-assertion. When borne on a shield or crest, is often initially adopted in reference to a special military action where a flag was captured, or was granted as a reward for gallant service. Banners may also indicate that a member of that family was once a standard-bearer. The principle distinction between a banner and a flag, standard, guidon, pennant etc. is that a banner is always square, while the others are elongated.

As a charge the Banner is usually hung from the battlements of a castle or carried by the figure of some creature, such as the paschal lamb (a holy lamb with a halo), which is nearly always depicted with a banner. The banner is the principle flag of a knight. The banner of the sovereign is five feet square; that of a prince or duke, four feet square; for all noblemen of inferior rank, three feet square. <sup>[11]</sup>

SIX

It is rare to see six of any given charge, and a shield, and generally it must be blazoned how they will be distributed on the shield. The number six can of course symbolism many different things: it is the number of sides on a cube; God is said to have created Man on the sixth day; and there are six points on the Star of David

BLUE

Azure (derived from the French word for "blue") represents the color of an eastern sky on a clear day. It also corresponds to the metal tin. The word, "azure" was introduced from the east during the Crusades. It signifies piety and sincerity, and is equated with autumn. In engravings it is represented by horizontal lines.

FLEUR-DE-LIS

The fleur-de-lis is a very ancient and widely used symbol. It is found in East Indian, Egyptian and Etruscan decorations, as well as Roman and Gothic architecture. It may originally have been intended to represent a lily or white iris, or an arrow or spearhead. In Christian symbolism, the fleur-de-lis is used as a symbol of the Holy Trinity and as an ensign of the Virgin Mary.

In heraldry, it is also said to signify faith, wisdom, and valor. Fleurs-de-lis are now most commonly associated with France.

In ancient times they may have signified a connection with that country through war, marriage or property rights. In English arms it was sometimes used as a mark of cadency for the sixth son.

THREE

"Three" devices, beasts or ordinaries of the same have a special significance in heraldry.

First of all, there is the obvious reference to the Trinity in the design that would signify observance of the Christian doctrine.

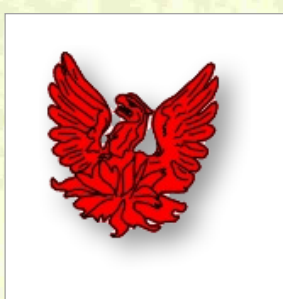

Secondly, with many Arms it brings balance that is steeped in tradition. To better understand this latter scenario, we must look at the evolution of shield in personal armory. Kite shields that were the most popular from the the 10th-14th century evolved into Heater shields that had flat tops c. 1250. This was the time of heraldry's beginnings and when "three" objects were used for balance in each corner of the shield.

Later, with the advent of the "chief," "chevron" and "bend" three devices brought balance to these ordinaries too.

THE CREST

The Crest was worn on top of the helmet, and was usually made of wood, metal, or boiled leather. It provided the double advantage of easy identification and the addition of height to the wearer. The Crest for the surname Seymore is described as follows:

THE SEYMORE CREST

A PHOENIX RISING FROM A CROWN.

PHOENIX

The Phoenix is a symbol from Greek mythology, of immortality, rebirth and renewal.

"The phoenix in heraldry is never represented in other than in one position, rising from flames, that is, with expanded wings and enveloped in flames of fire in which it is being consumed. It is usually represented exactly as an eagle in shape, but may be of any of the heraldic tinctures." <sup>[12]</sup>

"This bird was represented to be as large as the eagle. It was held that only one existed at the same time, and which, according to the ancient writers, lived 500 years, and when her end approached she made her nest, which latter, igniting by the heat of the sun, destroyed her, but out of her ashes arose another Phoenix. It was often used of old as an emblem of the Resurrection, sometimes with the motto "Resurgam." <sup>[13]</sup>

"An imaginary bird, described by ancient writers as in form like an eagle, but more beautiful in its plumage. Among the ancient classical writers it was an emblem of those existing in paradise, enjoying eternal youth and never-ending pleasure. Tacitus describes the phoenix as a singular bird, consecrated to the sun, and distinguished by its rich appearance and variegated colours." <sup>[12]</sup>

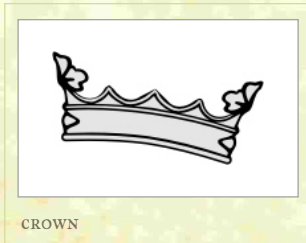

Another source notes "Legend states that at the end of its long life, this legendary bird built a pyre of spice-wood in the desert. It ignited the pyre by fanning its wings in the heat of the sun, plunged into the fire and was burned to ashes. Then a rejuvenated phoenix rose out of the cinders, born again."

The phoenix is also a symbol of love. It is often found as a symbol on a crest, accompanied by the flames that it rose out of renewed.

RISING

Rising indicates that the bird is in the act of taking off with its wings spread.

CROWN

The crown is an emblem of victory, sovereignty, and empire. It is a visible sign of success, thus the term "crowning achievement," and its significance as the decoration of the ultimate level of rank and power, makes bearing the crown a great honor. Crowns are sometimes a symbol of God, as he is considered by some to be the "King of all." There are different types of crown; the word "crown" blazoned without any additional details usually implies a ducal coronet without a cap.

Here is a listing of some of the sources consulted when researching British surnames. The resources below directly or indirectly influenced the authors of our surname histories. We have most of these titles in our library, others we have borrowed or had access to. Source materials have been chosen for their reliability and authenticity. Our research into surnames is ongoing, and we are continually adding to our source library. For each surname history, we seek and refer to sources specific to the surname; these are generally not included in the list below.
